3	This seems like it could be accomplished in a one day workshop! We are writing an inventory--not a biography. and step 10--is daily not yearly	Sep 27, 2011 7:12 AM
4	I do not feel I need a workshop to review my steps. I practice them every day and a workshop would be redundant. I think it a great idea for neophytes but when you have been associated with 12 step programs for many years, going over these steps in a writing workshop wouldn't suit me	Sep 26, 2011 12:36 PM
5	Personal commitments and timing very important Not too close to a holiday, etc..	Sep 26, 2011 6:57 AM
6	Doesn't matter where but within a 2 hr drive from NYC/West. is preferable. Also, I need to know well in advance since I need to make arrangements for child-care. I think this is a great theme for a retreat. If it is not favorable to most, I'd also like to meet weekly or so for 2-3 hours of group work with a local trusted servant.	Sep 26, 2011 5:15 AM
7	Graymour is my first choice of where to hold this... gives people the choice if they can afford to stay they can and if they want to attend but can't afford to stay the retreat is not so far away.	Sep 25, 2011 5:34 PM
8	I'd rather not travel more than an hour-ish from West.Putnam. I can drive self. Unsure if I am a WUIG member? Strongly agree with good RECOVERY, not necessarily physical. And for a retreat one wants top hear a different speaker, not the same speakers in local meetings who don't have great recovery, or are unrelatable in their recovery. And personally a lot of effort goes into "4th step work", too much dwelling, most drop after this step! I'd focius on later steps 8-12.	Sep 25, 2011 5:30 PM
9	1) I dont' really understand the question about 3-9 pm. Does this mean it would not be an overnight thing but we would go home and come back on Saturday? That would be preferable, but I am not sure that is what this question is asking. 2) As far as bringing one's own food: that is a lot of food to pack, sometimes retreats provide dinners and one would need to only bring bkfsts or something like that...AND the facility would have to have space for all to store their food if they bring it. 3)	Sep 25, 2011 5:02 PM
